

About the Saath Campaign

The Saath Campaign is a student-led initiative that brings practical life learning alive into classrooms through structured, interactive and activity-based sessions. We focus on areas that extend beyond textbooks, so that students understand their rights, navigate the digital world safely, make accurate financial decisions, and become more aware of the world around them.

OUR VISION

To bridge the gap between rural and urban learning in Maharashtra. Every child should know their rights, use technology safely, care for their environment, and express themselves with confidence.

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

“

Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world.

-Nelson Mandela

THE GAP WE AIM TO BRIDGE

We believe that education is not only about reading textbooks or passing examinations. While most of the classes focus only on academic excellence, important topics such as legal rights, recognising online risks, understanding money maintenance, and becoming an informed citizen, often remain outside the curriculum. Saath was created to bridge this gap by bringing practical knowledge directly to students.

OUR MISSION

We started Saath with one simple belief in mind, every child deserves the knowledge to understand their rights, protect themselves, make valid choices and to lead the world with confidence.

OUR EXPERIENCE

Over the 4 weeks at Ramrao Ingualwe Highschool, we discovered that teaching is more than just lessons. We built genuine connections with the students, learned to communicate ideas in simple and engaging ways, and adapted our teaching to their interests and understanding. From discussing human rights and cyber safety to learning about savings, income, investments, and needs versus wants, every session gave us an opportunity to make everyday knowledge more accessible.

WHY “SAATH”

“Saath” means together. We believe that impactful changes happen when students, teachers, schools and youth volunteers come together. Every session is not simply a lesson, but an exchange where students question, participate, enjoy, reflect and connect their learnings to everyday life.

STUDENT STAGE

“ Learning can be fun when it connects to everyday life. ”

Sanjana enjoyed learning about the 3Rs — Reduce, Reuse and Recycle and shared that the session helped her learn something she could use in everyday life.

TESTIMONY

The content covered during the sessions was informative, relevant and valuable for the students. The students participated actively and showed genuine interest throughout the sessions. The interactive activities, especially the 3R activity, encouraged their engagement and made the learning experience more effective.”

STUDENT STAGE

“ Knowing your rights gives you the confidence to speak up. ”

Pooja especially enjoyed our session on POCSO and child safety. She learned about understanding what is right and wrong and the importance of speaking up and seeking help.

A LETTER FROM THE FOUNDERS

Dear Saath Community,

Every meaningful initiative begins with a reason to care.

For us, Saath began with the belief that some of the most important lessons in life are often the ones students are never formally taught: how to understand their rights, manage money responsibly, stay safe in an increasingly digital world, and recognise their role in protecting the environment around them.

We did not want that belief to remain an idea discussed between five students. We wanted to take it into classrooms, test it, learn from it, and turn it into something useful.

Our first campaign was the beginning of that promise.

Walking into our first classroom, we carried lesson plans and activities with us. We walked out carrying something far more valuable: questions we had not expected, conversations we will remember, and a much clearer understanding of what meaningful education should feel like. It should be practical. It should be engaging. Most importantly, it should leave a student feeling more capable than they did before.

We also know that impact cannot be measured by photographs, posts, or one successful campaign. Saath will only mean something if we continue to show up. That means improving our curriculum, listening to feedback, remaining accountable to the communities we work with, and choosing consistency over momentary enthusiasm.

There is still so much we want to build. More classrooms. Better sessions. Stronger partnerships. Greater impact.

This newsletter is not a celebration of how far we have come. It is a reminder of how much further we intend to go.

And we hope you will be there with us.

Because change is rarely created alone.

It begins Saath.

With gratitude, purpose, and hope,
Sarah Patel -Founder of Saath

WHERE WE WERE

Shri Ramrao Ingawale High School, Hatkanangle, Kolhapur is a school serving students in the Hatkanangle community and is officially listed among the high schools in the district. For four weeks, it became the first home of the Saath Campaign, where we had the opportunity to learn, teach, and grow alongside its students; with the support of Principal Sunita Patil and the school's teachers. Our first classroom. Our first Saath.

WHAT WE TAUGHT

CHILD SAFETY

We introduced the students to what POCSO was, how they can recognise unsafe situations and the importance of speaking up about them and seeking help.

HUMAN RIGHTS

The students explored their rights, and why it's important to understand them and speak out about them if needed. Also we have always encouraged my students to be aware of what goes on in the world around them and their role as citizens.

The privilege of teaching and learning at once

WANTS

Students will be able to differentiate between essentials and nonessentials when making choices and make connections about that impact on their lives.

SAVINGS AND FINANCIAL LITERACY

Students were introduced to the importance of saving and making financial decisions.

INVESTMENT

Students were introduced to the concept of investment as well as the importance of thinking ahead when making important long term financial decisions.

CYBER CRIME AND ONLINE SAFETY

Cybercrime and Online Safety Students will have learned about different types of risks as well as how to use technology safely and responsibly.

THE 3 R'S

Students were introduced to the three Rs of sustainability—reduce, reuse, recycle and were made to do best out of waste activities.

OUR IMPACT

Over the course of four transformative weeks, SAATH endeavored to arm students with not just knowledge, but a compass to navigate the world beyond the classroom walls. Our mission went beyond the mere delivery of concepts; we inspired students to be curious, to delve into critical thinking, to grasp the essence of their rights, and to make empowered decisions that shape their daily lives. The passion and engagement that blossomed from our efforts were nothing short of inspiring, proving that nurturing a vibrant environment for learning and discussion can truly change lives and ignite a profound impact.

AN ARTWORK OF WORDS

The Lesson We Didn't Know We Came to Learn

We walked into the classroom thinking we were there to teach. Four weeks later, we walked out of the same classroom knowing we had been taught too.

The Saath Campaign began with a simple belief: education should not end with textbooks and examinations. A child should know their rights well, understand the importance of privacy online, know the difference between a need and a want, understand money, and feel confident enough to ask questions.

That belief brought us to Ramrao Ingawale High School, Hatkanangle, Kolhapur, where, over four weeks, we reached across 95 students. We came with lessons on POCSO and child safety, human rights, cybercrime and online safety, savings, budgeting, investments, current affairs, and needs versus wants. But somewhere between teaching them concepts and them responding back with questions, the lessons stopped feeling like lessons. They became conversations. A discussion on individual rights became a conversation about confidence. A lesson on cybercrime turned into a reminder that understanding the digital world is as important as the physical one. A simple activity could turn an ordinary classroom into a room full of questions, laughter, and hands raised in the air. That is what we wanted Saath to be. Not just an ordinary lecture. Not another period added to a timetable. A space where knowledge could become useful.

One of the moments that stayed with us most was seeing students remember what they had learned. By the end of our time there, every student we taught was able to recite the POCSO number by heart. It may sound like a small thing. To us, it wasn't. Because sometimes impact doesn't arrive loudly. Sometimes it looks like a student remembering one number. Asking one question. Understanding one right. Making one safer decision. And sometimes, it looks like a child saying that learning becomes fun when it connects to everyday life.

Our teacher feedback reminded us of something equally important: the students were not passive listeners. They participated, showed genuine interest, and responded especially well to interactive activities. For four weeks, we tried to give students knowledge that could stay with them long after we left the classroom. But they gave us something too. They taught us that teaching requires patience. That communication is not about speaking the most, but being understood. That curiosity can transform a classroom. And that impact cannot always be measured by numbers. 95 students is a number. The questions they asked are a story. The confidence they gained is the impact.

When we started SAATH, we wanted to bridge a gap between what students learn for school and what they need for life. After these four weeks, I think we understand that bridge a little better. It is built one conversation at a time.

One student at a time.

One classroom at a time.

And perhaps that is what Saath really means. Together.
